The book is kind of like a biography but it is set against the backdrop of South African history and also provides a behind-the-scenes look at the life of Mandela. It also traces his relationship with the ANC, the ANC Youth League, the Congress of the People, the United Democratic Front, and the African National Congress, his daily life as President of the country and as a prisoner on Robben Island. Mandela talks about his childhood and his early days in the military and his life as a combatant in the 1948-1949 war. He talks about his views on various issues such as the relationship with the United States and Britain, the racial oppression that he had to live with, his views on the British, his relationship with African leaders like Nkrumah, and much more. I enjoy a good biography but if there is one thing that I miss about his political career and his life in prison it is the 1,000 page-plus memoirs that he wrote, which were smuggled out of Robben Island. I now hope that it will be made into a movie and I hope that it will be a movie that will convey the life and the suffering that Mandela had to endure during that time. I cannot recommend this book enough. At 900 pages this is a big book and a real page-turner. Besides Mandela, other African leaders that I have become interested in this year include Mugabe (Robert Mugabe, president of Zimbabwe) and Yoweri Museveni (Joseph Laurent Mutinuzi, president of Uganda) because of their regimes and their policies on reducing poverty and also because of the way that they have handled the refugee problem. Mugabe was sent to prison for treason for inciting violence in 1983, and because of his policies which include the land reform program, the indigenization of mining, the creation of a national education system and the provision of free health care and free education to the masses. He is also known for his policies of blaming 'traitors' for Zimbabwe's economic crisis. If there is one thing that Mugabe does tell us in this book about himself,

I wish to find if there is any of the said nucleotides in the given String. Like this: FUCK this is to test if there is a TTTT in the given string. let t = "TATTAT" let f = "FUCK" let s = "LOL" let found = String.contains(t) //must return NO let found = String.contains(f) //must return NO let found = String.contains(s) //must return YES So if there is a match I would like to know which nucleotide is matched. I can match the string with every nucleotide I have in a dictionary like that let from = nucleotide.letter for each in t[.].
