After spending a fair bit of time testing this awesome freebie, I'm happy to say that the latest Photoshop release is the closest Mac users have ever come to an iOS optimized version of Photoshop. The effects are amazing, speeds are faster than ever, editing is easier than ever, and the ability to export is now even easier! With Adobe Photoshop for iPad, you'll discover a whole new way to work digitally. What's new in this version? Well, for one, a slew of the new features that have come to Creative Cloud the past couple months have made their way to the iPad. There's a new Content-Aware Sharpen tool, that finds sharpness where it's lacking, a Quick Fix tool that picks out objects in an image (think of it as a version of the Magic Wand tool) and an Auto Lens Correction tool that does the same but for lens distortion. There are two new Layers styles: Topaz, and Elk. The regular Layer Styles are flowing more fluidly than ever before. Blur and Vignette styles are also new. Other minor fixes and tweaks for the iPad have been made as well, like a better Color Picker with Apple's Live Photo editing support, and improved support for importing Time-lapse videos. The new "Fade Channels" option in the Styles panel is a nifty little editing option that allows you to add some type of blur or edge to a layer so that when you balance your photo's overall exposure, you can now see exactly which areas of the image you blurred. Easier adjustments to the Levels, Curves, Hue/Saturation, and Color Balance sliders have also made their way to the iPad version. You can now hide and unhide layers at will, and do so with a single tap on the Undo icon (you know, that one in the top lefthand corner of the image). The brush performance has been boosted. A new set of brushes called "Pixel Brush" pick up mineral fragments and blending blues, greens, and purples from photographic materials.
